A.J.C. Chief Reports Move On Bias In Church Texts Spurred By Question Of Hitlerism

A "widespread" movement among European Catholic and Protestant church leaders against anti-Jewish prejudice rooted in religious texts and materials was reported at the American Jewish Committee's 55th annual meeting in the Hotel Commodore, in New York.

Zachariah Shuster, director of the AJC's European office, who went to New York to report this development, says the New York Herald Tribune, said important churchmen have been striving "to demonstrate the fundamentally anti-Christian nature of biased religious teachings that have fed anti-Semitism over the centuries".

In another report, Abraham Monk, director of the AJC's Latin American office, warned that anti-Semitism in South America generally — and Argentina in particular — is at the highest level since the end of World War II.

Mr. Monk said political upheavals in Latin America have given new strength to extreme Rightist groups that are anti-American and anti-Semitic. He added that the "most aggressive" anti-Semitic groups operate in Argentina, especially Tavuara, "a semi-secret organization with a military type of discipline and Fascist ideology."

In his report of growing religious amity in Europe, Mr. Shuster cited the action of Pope John XXIII in eliminating from the Good Friday prayers such prayers as "perfidious Jews" and the declaration of the Protestant Synod of Berlin-Brandenburg "that hatred toward Jews is a manifest impiety."

These actions, said Mr. Shuster, are but "two surface manifestations of a much greater ferment going on in the Christian world with regard to Jews."

He said the ferment has found expression in a "renewed study and respect for the Old Testament and Judaism, not just as relics of Biblical times but as having contemporary force and meaning," says the New York Herald Tribune. There has also been increased research to determine more exactly the historic ties between Judaism and other religions.

"Such understanding often results in changes in the teaching of the catechism and in religious texts," he added. "This has been particularly true in France, and generally such revisions go hand in hand with the combatting of prejudice."

One of the most potent forces spurring this restudy he said, was the question posed by Catholic and Protestant religious leaders — "how could Hitlerism have occurred in a Christian civilization?"

The examination of this question, he continued, perhaps more than anything else has set off the trend toward combatting prejudice rooted in religious misunderstanding.

Mr. Shuster stressed the importance of the Catholic-sponsored, unprecedented "Agape" (fraternal love feast) held recently in Rome, where representatives of 18 different religious faiths (including Jewish) were invited to consider "racial prejudice and the causes of religious and cultural misunderstanding."

Mr. Shuster said that recent steps by leading Catholic authorities had raised hopes that the forthcoming Ecumenical Council would "pave the way for a fundamental re-examination of distorted pictures of other religious groups contained in religious texts which in the past have been the source of misunderstandings and prejudice."

On the situation in Argentina, Mr. Monk said the Frondisi administration (now out of power) did not interfere with the activities of the neo-Fascist organization Tavuara, reports the New York Herald Tribune, which despite "repeated acts of violence and vandalism" against Jewish and democratic institutions "enjoyed a strange kind of immunity from the police."

Prejudice Study Shows Wider Protestant View Of Jews

The number of negative references to Jews in Protestant Sunday School texts has declined considerably in the last few years, a continuing study at Union Theological Seminary indicated. The study found that Protestant writers had far more difficulty in dealing positively with Roman Catholics.

"With few exceptions," Dr. Theodore R. Olson, its director, told in an interview with John [illegible] of the New York Times, "Jews are more advantageously presented by Protestant educators than are other religious groups."

This does not mean that all Protestant denominations present Jews and Judaism in a favorable light, he added. The lessons of many conservative Fundamentalist groups that refer to Jews could be rated generally negative, he explained. They are less negative, however, than lessons referring to Catholics, other Protestants, and other faith groups, he said.

The study found that liberal religious writers, such as those in the Unitarian Universalist Association, and neo-orthodox writers, such as those of the United Presbyterian Church, view all religious groups, as well as non-religious groups, favorably. They accept these other groups as part of the pluralism of American life.

Dr. Olson's research at Union is a continuation of a long study he had conducted at Yale on the problem of biased references in Protestant texts. The results of that study will be published this fall by Yale University Press in a book titled, "Faith and Prejudice."

For a number of years, Dr. Olson pointed out, sociologists have been saying that seeds of anti-Semitism might possibly exist in the Christian message, especially if it is carelessly presented.

The root charge has been that religious texts sometimes give the simplistic idea that "the Jews killed Christ" without regard to the Roman role in the Crucifixion or the fact that Jesus was a Jew. The Christian child, it has been observed, is likely to connect the ancient Jews depicted negatively in the denomination's Bible literature with the Jewish children who live next door to him.

The new thing that Dr. Olson has found is that church editors have become increasingly concerned about the images of the Jews that they are presenting, says the New York Times. And from that, he said, many have extended their concern to racial groups and other religious minorities.

"Thirty years ago it was difficult to get editors interested in inter-group relations," he went on. "Thirty years ago you would not have found conservatives and Fundamentalists who wanted this kind of change."

Now, he said, the editors have been asking for evaluation of their curriculums. In response, he has been setting up conferences for editors and writers on how Biblical teachings and modern religious issues can be presented to children and young adults without prejudicing them against other faith groups. The most recent seminar

Calls Bar Against Jews At Top Levels Outmoded

Use of religious discrimination against Jewish engineers, scientists, researchers, and economists in major American industries "has largely disappeared," the American Jewish Committee said in New York, reports the New York Times. The finding was reported in a two-year-study issued by the Committee at its fifty-fifth annual meeting, at the Commodore Hotel.

Louis Caplan, of Pittsburgh, president of the Committee, said that "the current technological revolution in the United States has made possible a major and widespread breakthrough against discrimination" in the technical and research branches of industry.

Mr. Caplan noted that in this field "negative stereotypes against

"Ihud" Critics Of Ben-Gurion Want Military Government Over Arabs In Israel Abolished

In all the public debates in Israel that touch on civil liberties, there stands, just off-stage and slightly in the shadow, a vociferous little organization that considers itself a sort of national conscience.

The organization is called Ihud, which is Hebrew for union. Its first aim is to achieve friendship and equal treatment for Israel's 240,000 Arab citizens as a necessary step toward peace between Israel and the neighboring Arab states.

The chairman of the organization, Dr. Shimon Shereshevsky, is a radiologist who came to what is now Israel in 1934 from East Prussia, says the New York Times, where he found that discriminatory treatment bred hate and led in the end to destruction. Dr. Shereshevsky, a smallish, gray-haired man of 61 years, works intensely in his cause at night from his modest flat in Jerusalem. When he speaks, he sits forward on his chair.

"If you hate a minority, and are suspicious of it," he said, "then you will intensify the cause of suspicion, and bring it to new courses." He was alluding to a statement attributed to Premier David Ben-Gurion in an interview published on January 5 in the French newspaper, Le Figaro. Mr. Ben-Gurion was quoted as having said that most of Israel's Arabs, "if given the opportunity, would help to destroy Israel."

Ihud issued a reply to the Premier, signed by Prof. Martin Buber, the philosopher, who is the best-known personality remaining in Ihud. Dr. Buber charged that the Premier's expression was the kind that would make bad citizens of the Arabs and that it contradicted a basic ideal of Zionism: that there could be no material substitute for a lack of personal and national dignity.

This statement reflected the liberal tone adopted by Ihud when it was founded in 1942 by the late Dr. Judah L. Magnes, an American, and the first president of Hebrew University. Another American who shaped the organization in its beginning was the late Henrietta Szold.

In their opinion, Dr. Shereshevsky explained, it would have been possible to establish a Jewish national home in Palestine without causing grievance for the Arabs, says the New York Times. Zionism, he said, was an experiment in resettlement but not with a view to suppressing the local population.

Even according to Jewish religious concepts, Dr. Shereshevsky declared, there is no "ownership" of the Holy Land, neither by Arabs nor by Jews. He pointed to the Torah, which records: "For the land is Mine, for ye are strangers and sojourners with Me."

Ihud opposed the official Zionist dogma, as it developed, for a Jewish state occupying the whole of the Holy Land. Instead, Dr. Shereshevsky said, it wanted a bi-national state in Palestine in which neither Arabs nor Jews would dominate the other.

The Ihud leader asserted that a genuine security for the Jewish population would never be achieved except by good relations with the Arabs in Israel and around her. Dr. Shereshevsky conceded that Arab intransigence might give Israel very little room to make changes in its conduct of foreign relations. But where there is room for doing very little, he contends, not even that much is done.

He believes that a start can be made with the 240,000 Arabs in Israel, about 205,000 of whom now live under military rule. Fundamentally distrusted as a potential fifth column these Arabs are denied normal access to civil courts and the right to appeal against the rulings of military tribunals. They must obey curfews and the measures that restrict their movement.

Dr. Buber, in his criticism of Mr. Ben-Gurion, demanded that military government in the Arab-populated areas in Israel be abolished, along with all other measures that restrict their movement, says the New York Times. Dr. Buber and Ihud also have criticized Mr. Ben-Gurion for his rejection of proposals that the Arab refugees who fled Palestine be free to return if they wanted.

Dr. Shereshevsky has no real idea of the weight his organization carries with the Government or of how many supporters he has. Ihud's monthly publication has 800 subscribers, and 400 more copies are printed and distributed by the organization without payment.

PREJUDICE STUDY SHOWS WIDER VIEW

was held in Elgin, Ill., in January.

From these conferences has come a plan for Dr. Olson, working with the editors, to write a manual on intergroup problems that arise in producing religious education materials.

When Protestant text writers are dealing consciously with intergroup relations, Dr. Olson said, they are on the side of the angels. The images are all good and the writers point out clearly that prejudice against other racial and religious groups violates an essential doctrine of the Christian faith.

The major problems arise where other groups are mentioned incidentally, or by way of application, in stating the denomination's beliefs. One writer, Dr. Olson said, wanted to make the point that it was good to avoid situations that provoke temptation.

"So he used an 'Uncle Rastus' type of illustration," Dr. Olson continued. "He wrote that Uncle Rastus would always walk around the block rather than pass by his neighbor's watermelon patch.

"Right there, you get the stereotype of a Negro as being prone to succumb to temptation, prone to be more immoral than the rest of us, and prone to eat watermelon."

Fortunately, he commented, this kind of example is rare, says the New York Times. Often, Dr. Olson said, a conservative Protestant author will use the Reformation dispute with the Roman Catholic Church as a staging area from which to attack the Catholic Church of today. From the curriculums surveyed, he said, "the Roman Catholic Church presents to the Protestants the greatest threat to the values and doctrines that Protestants cherish."

Observing that an editor could not be asked to eliminate everything that would be objectionable to another faith group, Dr. Olson said:

"Protestant teachings that have to be reconciled with a given Roman Catholic view of the Reformation or with a Jewish position concerning the New Testament would be an abandonment of the Protestant position."

However, he commented, it is quite possible to take into account points of conflict between the faiths and discuss them realistically, without any over-all negative portrayal of Catholics and Jews in the materials.

Dr. Olson is continuing as director of the study, Project in Research and Consultation in Intergroup Aspects of Protestant Curriculums, Union Theological Seminary, Broadway and 120th Street, New York.

CALL BAR AGAINST JEWS OUTMODED

Jews are dim memories, and high mobility, in terms of promotion and advancement on the basis of skill and know-how, is the general rule." However, the report asserted that discriminatory barriers against the employment of Jews on upper management and policy-making levels still persisted "to a very strong degree."

It was found that in top managerial and policy echelons "artificial barriers and stereotypes still exclude qualified personnel for irrelevant reasons of religion or race."

As an example, the report said that Jews comprised less than one-half of one per cent of the management executives employed by 500 major American corporations, even though executive personnel were recruited from college graduates and Jews formed eight per cent of all college graduates in the U.S.

However, Mr. Caplan predicted, according to the New York Times, that "with the speedy advance of America's technological revolution, the officers in American top management will have to be chosen without regard to outmoded standards of social stereotypes that are very much the rule in the executive suite today."

Mr. Caplan said that the ratio of Jews selecting careers in business was "almost identical with that of college graduates of other religions."

U. S. Jews And Israelis To Hold "Dialogue"

The first "dialogue" between American Jews and Israelis will be held at Jerusalem, auspices of the American Jewish Congress, June 12-14. Some 500 Americans will fly to Israel in five chartered planes for round-table discussions with an equal number of Israelis. Max Youngstein, of New York, is conference chairman. Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion; Education Minister Abba Eban; Moshe Sharrett, chairman of the Jewish Agency; and Martin Buber, noted philosopher, will speak.

Dr. Joachim Prinz, AJCongress president; Shad Polier, Governing Council chairman; Mrs. Thelma Richman, of Philadelphia, chairman of the organization's international affairs commission; Stanley H. Lowell, a national vice-president; and chairman of the New York City Commission on Human Rights; and Professor Sol Liptsin, of the University of New York, chairman of the commission on Jewish affairs, will speak.

The conference will deal not with Israel's financial needs or the philanthropic responsibilities of U.S. Jewry but rather with social, political, and cultural issues of mutual interest and concern, such topics as: separation of church and state; treatment of minorities and civil liberties; development of cultural ties. Examination of each major subject will begin with an address by an American or Israeli. Then groups of five of each will hold round-table discussions of the issues raised. Conclusions and comments will be brought to the floor of the entire conference by discussion leaders.

The Famous Pissarro Family Of Eight Artists

BY CHARLES S. SPENCER

At a discussion of "Jews And Art" in which I took part some time ago, the speakers were asked to name the greatest Jewish artist. Although we may not have agreed on a single choice, every one of the speakers included the name of Camille Pissarro among the first three. No student of art would disagree with this judgment.

An exhibition at the O'Hana Gallery in London provided the opportunity of again seeing some of the works of this master. But the exhibition was doubly interesting since it was entitled "Three Generations of Pissarros" and included the work of eight members of this amazing family. In addition to Camille, there were the works of his sons, Lucien, who lived most of his life in England, where he died in 1944; Felix, who was called Titi, and sometimes signed his pictures John Rock, and who died in 1897 at the early age of 23; Ludovic, who died in France in 1952; and Paulemile who is still living in France. The collection included two of Camille's grandchildren, Orovida, the daughter of Lucien, now aged 69, and Hugues, the 27-year-old son of Paulemile.

The greatest of them all, of course, is the first of them all, Camille. He was born in 1830 on the Island of St. Thomas in the West Indies, which had a fair-sized Jewish Community descended from Dutch, French, and English settlers of the 17th century.

Abraham Pissarro, his father, was a Sephardic Jew of French nationality, and a successful merchant. His son, whom he named Jacob (but who later changed it to the more French-sounding Camille), was sent to school in Paris in 1841 and remained there for six years. It was the headmaster of this school who first taught him to draw from nature and recognised his outstanding talents.

Abraham, however, had long decided that his son was to enter the family business and for five years, until 1852, Camille worked in the store at St. Thomas. In that year, however, he met a Danish painter, Fritz Melbye, with whom he ran away to Venezuela; when he returned to his family two years later, his father was reconciled to his son's ambitions. With parental consent, Camille returned to Paris in 1855 where he met the great French artist Corot, who remained a deep influence throughout his life.

Camille entered the studio of Anton Melbye, the brother of his Danish friend, and later settled in the countryside outside Paris. At this time, however, he was painting West Indian scenes in a rather oriental style which is curiously reflected in the work of his granddaughter, Orovida, who continued to create scenes in this manner.

The year of great importance to Pissarro and indeed to the history of modern art in 1859, when he first met Claude Monet, for it was with this artist and others that Pissarro was later to introduce Impressionism to the world. At about this time he also met the great painter Cezanne for the first time, and other artists with whom he was to be closely associated. Another date of great importance to his career and to Impressionism is 1870, when, during the Franco-Prussian War, he came to England with Monet and the English-born artist, Sisley, who are also great artistic figures of the period.

In England Pissarro was introduced to the painting of Constable and Turner, from whom he and his fellow artists learned so much about the painting of nature in an unromantic fashion and in the capturing of natural light. From then on Pissarro and his friends talked and developed what we now call Impressionism, and the first exhibition bearing this title was held by them in 1874.

Pissarro, in fact, was the only one of the group who exhibited in each of the seven Impressionist exhibitions which followed. At this time his work matured, and he earned the title "poet of the earth" which he so well deserves. His rendering of light and movement was brought to a precision and a poetic intensity never surpassed and he has often been described as superior to many of the other Impressionists because of the soundness of his drawing and the firmness of the design of his pictures. His sense of colour was individual and subtle.

Later he favoured a way of painting in short strokes, eventually almost in dots, which became part of the Pointillisme developed by such artists as Seurat and Signac. Like so many of his colleagues, Pissarro had to wait many years for financial success and indeed only achieved it in 1892 when he was already over 60 years old. He died eleven years later on November 13th, 1903, in Paris.

George Moore, the famous Irish writer, described Pissarro in his old age as looking like "the patriarch Abraham." Throughout his life it was not generally known that he was a Jew, until he proclaimed it publicly at the time of the Dreyfus Trial to establish his abhorrence of French anti-Semitism.

Since his death the famous letters of his son, Lucien, have been published both in the French and in translation, and have established Pissarro as a writer and indeed a philosopher of high merit. In his old age Camille Pissarro lived surrounded by his five sons who were all artists. He was always anxious not to impose his theories or his doctrines upon them, but wished them to develop by themselves with their own visual sense and their own individual response.

In fact he once wrote to his two eldest sons, "Scorn my judgment! I have such a longing for you all to be great that I cannot hide my opinions from you. Accept only those that are in concord with your sentiments and mode of understanding. What I fear most is for you to resemble me too much. Be bold then, and to work!"

It was, however, inevitable that they should be greatly influenced not only by Impressionism, which after all influenced all young artists of their time, but especially by their father's magnificent gifts. The finest artist of the five sons is Lucien, who painted the English countryside with the same delicacy and sensitivity which his father brought to France. Felix, too, carried on this tradition, but died as a very young man before his promise could be realised. Ludovic and Paulemile did not have the same delicacy and their paintings lack the subtlety and sensitiveness of their father.

Orovida is well-known for the oriental studies I have mentioned and her paintings of animals. She is also a most competent portraitist. The youngest member of the family exhibited a number of black and white portraits rather like magazine illustrations. A letter in the catalogue from him, written in charming bad English stated:

"My father didn't want I try to be painter, I did it and gave my paintings to a french gallery. I didn't tell my father, nevertheless he knew it when seeing my name in his daily paper. Since that, my mournful father is trying to show me how sad is the artist's life. When he saws my paintings, hopeless he ask me to make a other name; there is why Pizaro."

The last sentence, as you will have gathered, explains why his name appears as Hugues Pizaro, in a different spelling from that of his famous family.

It is doubtful whether there is any other great painter from whom there sprung seven other artists whose work could be gathered for so interesting and satisfying an exhibition.

A Jugful Of Dowry: With The J.D.C. Around, Life Goes On

BY JOSEPH ROSENBERG

Every Friday afternoon, as he returned home from his tinsmith shop, Joseph Ganis, a 63-year-old Jew living on the Greek island of Zakynthos, would deposit some coins in an iron jug hidden securely in his home. Inside the jug was the equivalent of about $100, the dowry for Rachmanit, his 24-year-old daughter. Soon, thought Mr. and Mrs. Ganis, they would have a sum large enough to present to a man worthy of marrying Rachmanit. Their elder daughter had already been married for some years and was the mother of five children. And, like the Ganis ancestors who lived on the island of Zakynthos before them for 500 years, she had married a man from the community and planned to stay there for the rest of her life near her family.

Yet, despite the hopes and wishes held by the Ganises, nine years ago they were not living in their island home. With 24 other Jews from their community, they had to go to Athens, to be under the care of the Joint Distribution Committee, major U.S. welfare agency aiding needy Jews abroad with funds from the United Jewish Appeal. There they awaited the time when their completely ruined home, and future, on the island of Zakynthos could be rebuilt.

Their misfortune began during an early August morning when the whole family awoke with a start. First there was a violent roar. When they became fully awake, they realized that the earth was shaking violently beneath them, in a series of ominous rumblings and quakes. As the intensity of the tremors increased, a new sound was added, that of collapsing walls and buildings. Joined in the tumult were the cries of the terror-stricken and injured.

Joseph Ganis, deafened during service in the Greek Army in 1912, could not hear the noise but could feel the rolling earth as waves of tremors shook him crazily. Sturdily constructed of stone, the Ganis home soon became the only upright structure in the area. Towards evening, as the tremors lessened in strength, the house was crowded with homeless earthquake victims who settled down with the Ganises for the long vigil until daylight.

The tremors began again at dawn the next day. The earth heaved and rocked around them. As the frightened group in the house waited, they suddenly heard the collapsing wall of the building next door. Realizing their peril, they hastily rose to flee their shelter as a rain of stones, debris, and timber fell on them. Mrs. Ganis and Rachmanit escaped without injury. Joseph Ganis received a slight head cut.

All the inhabitants of Zakynthos, including the 41 Jews who lived there, fled to the fields and mountains where they could be safe from falling debris. Behind them the town burned, consuming everything that the earthquake had failed to destroy. When night descended, the Ganis family fell into an exhausted sleep in the open fields. The elderly Mr. Ganis, fatigued by the day's activities, failed to notice the fire that crept towards him, ignited his trousers and burned his legs before he finally doused the blaze.

The next day a Greek warship took the survivors from their island refuge to a neighboring community, where they were given their first food in two days. By this time, JDC had been alerted and foodstuffs, clothing, and medical supplies had been dispatched to the scene to assist the Jewish victims. Additional plans were made by JDC officials for long-range care of the 41 Jews who lost everything in the catastrophe. The Ganis family, meanwhile, had been taken to a hotel in Athens where the local Jewish community, with funds given by JDC, helped to establish them temporarily. Leaving Mrs. Ganis behind, the father and daughter returned to Zakynthos and their destroyed home to search for their possessions and to find, if possible, the jugful of coins buried somewhere underneath the debris.

With the help of Greek soldiers, standing guard, the old man and the girl dug into the grey pile. First they found a charred and battered silver tray; the second object they found was the iron jug. The intense heat of the fires had melted the jug into a shapeless mass still containing grey ashes. From the sooty inside Mr. Ganis extracted two coins that were recognizable, the rest was useless as currency.

Reunited once again in Athens, the Ganis family was cared for by JDC. Seventeen of their Jewish neighbors emigrated to Israel through the JDC migration service. Others hoped to emigrate to the United States, while the remainder, families like the Ganises, hoped to return to Zakynthos to pick up their lives again. Rachmanit enrolled in an ORT school, to learn a skill that would eventually help her family to recover its losses. Besides the necessary clothing, medical care, and temporary shelter given by JDC to the 24 Jewish earthquake survivors still in Greece, JDC provided free loan funds with which they could open a new business or recover their lost one.

Mr. Ganis looked forward to establishing a new tinsmith shop on his island home. But the dowry he saved for his daughter's marriage was off in the distant future. He could only hope that he would be able to save enough money to marry his daughter to a worthy man.

Brights FINE CANADIAN Wines
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.

Israel's Fourteenth Year Shows Progress Toward The Goal, A Homogeneous Nation

Israel and the Family of Nations

Israel's position in the family of nations was summed up recently by the Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion, as follows:

"The Government is today in normal diplomatic relations with 25 European, 22 American, 15 Asian, and 20 African States, and with Australia and New Zealand, 84 out of the hundred members of the United Nations. Particularly friendly ties already exist with new countries in Africa, such as Nigeria, Congo (Brazzaville), Liberia, Upper Volta, the Ivory Coast and the Malagasy Republic. There is close cooperation with the ancient lands of Iran and Turkey, and Ethiopia on the Red Sea.

"Relations with Britain are much better, and, during the Prime Minister's visit to Paris in June, 1961, President De Gaulle declared that Israel is France's 'friend and ally'. Treaties of friendship have been concluded with States in Europe, Asia, Africa, and Latin America. Visitors to Israel in the past year included three African Presidents, four Prime Ministers, and Cabinet Ministers from 18 African States. In the last three years, 1,086 young men and women from Asia and Africa were trained here, among other things, in agriculture, cooperation, labour organization, and youth movements."

Israel's policy of peace and cooperation with all peace-loving countries, whatever their internal regimes, gained wider understanding and sympathy. The speeches of the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister, and the statements and votes of her delegation at the United Nations, gave expression to Israel's opposition to all forms of colonialist oppression and racial discrimination.

Official delegations, groups, and individuals came from many countries to study Israel's new social patterns, her scientific progress and the work of her labour movement. Newly independent nations sent their students to her institutions of higher learning and to special courses arranged for their benefit, and welcomed her experts who went out to share their experience and help to establish joint enterprises.

Israel welcomed during the year the Presidents of Upper Volta, Dahomey, and the Malagasy Republic, and the Prime Ministers of Norway, Eastern Nigeria, Western Nigeria, British Guiana and, at the beginning of 1962, Denmark. Some of the other countries from which Ministers, and senior officials and parliamentarians came were the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Greece, Cyprus, Guatemala, Uruguay, Venezuela, Burma, the Central African Republic, Tanganyika, Sierra Leone, Togo, the Ivory Coast, Uganda, Congo, and Niger.

The Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister undertook important trips abroad to cement friendships. Mr. Ben-Gurion went to America, Canada, Britain, and France between May 23 and June 8, meeting President Kennedy, Mr. Diefenbaker, Mr. Macmillan, and General De Gaulle, and paid a three-and-a-half-week visit to Burma in December. Mrs. Meir, the Foreign Minister, undertook a five-week tour of the Scandinavian countries in May and June, and left on a six-week tour of the Far East in January, 1962.

On October 23, Ethiopia, which previously had only consular representation in this country, extended de jure recognition to Israel.

At the United Nations Assembly, the chief subject affecting Israel was the question of the Arab refugees, on which the Arab States made a concerted effort to ensure that the Assembly's resolution should include clauses injurious to Israel's interests. These efforts were unsuccessful: the Arab amendments were not passed, and 34 countries supported a resolution urging direct peace talks between Israel and the Arab countries. The Prime Minister made a statement in the Knesset, later approved by a large majority in the House, declaring that the problem could only be solved by the resettlement of the refugees in the Arab countries, and reiterating Israel's readiness to cooperate in such a solution.

The borders were relatively quiet, though there was sporadic armed infiltration. Israeli farmers were repeatedly shot at across the Syrian border, and on June 24 Israel drew the attention of the Security Council to a wave of such incidents.

Arab hostility, however, continued unabated. The Arab boycott of Israeli trade continued, in violation of the United Nations charter, and the Egyptian blockade of the Suez Canal to Israeli ships and cargoes on their way to and from Israel was maintained in defiance of express Security Council decisions in 1953 and 1956. The Arab States still refused to recognize Israel's existence; Abdel-Nasser and other Arab leaders repeatedly threatened to renew the attempt to destroy her when the time should be ripe, though such belligerent declarations were toned down in statements made for foreign consumption.

The Eichmann Trial

Perhaps the outstanding event of Israel's fourteenth year was the trial of Adolf Eichmann for his share in the murder of six million Jews in Europe.

Eichmann was brought before a magistrate on May 23, charged, and remanded in custody, according to the procedure prescribed by law. On the same afternoon the Prime Minister announced that Eichmann had been placed under arrest. The accused was interrogated and the evidence assembled by a special unit of the Israel Police, Bureau 06, which submitted the material, when complete, to the Attorney General, Gideon Hausner. The indictment, consisting of 15 counts, was submitted to the Jerusalem District Court on February 22, under the Nazis and their Collaborators (Punishment) Law, 1951.

The prisoner was accused of crimes against the Jewish people and humanity, war crimes, and membership in hostile Nazi organizations. The charges included "causing, together with others, the killing of millions of Jews, in his capacity as the person responsible for the execution of the Nazi plan for the physical extermination of the Jews."

Eichmann chose Dr. Robert Servatius, of Cologne, to represent him. As foreign lawyers are not generally allowed to appear in Israel courts, the Knesset passed a law enabling persons on trial on a capital charge to be represented by foreign counsel. The Government allotted Dr. Servatius the sum of $20,000 to cover his costs.

The Knesset also passed a law providing that a court trying a capital case be headed by a Supreme Court Justice. The composition of the special bench of the Jerusalem District Court to try Eichmann, announced on February 27, was: Supreme Court Justice Moshe Landau, nominated by the President of the Supreme Court, and Judges Benjamin Halevy, President of the Jerusalem District Court, and Yitzhak Raveh, of the Tel Aviv District Court, both nominated by the President of the Jerusalem District Court.

The trial was conducted in all respects according to the established rules and principles of Israel's legal system. The Israel Judiciary is entirely free from all political influence. Judges are appointed by the President of the State, on the recommendation of a special independent appointments committee. In the execution of their duties, they are responsible only to the law and their consciences.

The trial opened on April 11 in a special court room in the Jerusalem Civic Centre, Beit Ha'am, in which accommodation had been prepared for the translators and other court staff, and the 500 journalists (350 from abroad) who reported the proceedings.

For the prosecution, there appeared: Gideon Hausner, Attorney General, Dr. Jacob Robinson, Legal Advisor, and Gabriel Bach, Jacob Bar-Or, and Zvi Terlo, Deputy State Attorneys. Dr. Robert Servatius and Dr. Dieter Wechtenbruch appeared for the defence. M. Scharf, an Israeli lawyer, advised the defence on matters of Israeli law.

The official proceedings were conducted in Hebrew. Defence counsel's statements and pleas in German, and evidence in English, German, Hungarian, French, and Yiddish, were consecutively translated into Hebrew. The proceedings were simultaneously translated into English, German and French, and verbatim transcripts were issued in these languages, as well as in Hebrew. A summary was also issued in Yiddish. The entire proceedings were filmed and recorded on tape.

Sixteen witnesses, who for various reasons could not give evidence in Israel, were examined by foreign Courts, and the transcripts of their testimony submitted to the Court in Jerusalem. The Court sat for a total of 114 sessions over 16 weeks, the hearing of pleas and evidence being completed on August 14. Evidence was given by 111 witnesses, and 1,543 exhibits were submitted. The Court announced on December 11 that it had found Eichmann guilty, and the reading of the reasoned judgement was completed in December. Sentence of death was pronounced on December 15. The accused was informed that he had the right to appeal to the Supreme Court.

Jewish Festival Of Shovuos Begins At Sundown June 7

(Prepared by the Commission on Information About Judaism of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations and the Central Conference of American Rabbis.)

The Jewish Festival of Shovuos, commemorating the giving of the Ten Commandments by God to Moses at Mount Sinai, will be observed beginning at sundown, June 7. The holiday is observed for two days by Orthodox and Conservative Jews, and for one day by Reform Jews.

The festival also commemorates the gathering of the first harvest, when the ancient Israelites would go to the Temple with flowers and fruits, as offerings for the Lord, in addition to their individual prayers.

The word Shovuos means "weeks," and signifies the seven-week period between Passover and this holiday. During Shovuos, confirmation services are held in Reform temples and in some Conservative synagogues. The confirmation ceremony is held to mark the completion of the elementary religious education of young men and women. The early leaders of Reform Judaism selected Shovuos as the day on which to observe this ceremony because it commemorates the confirmation of faith by the Jewish people when they received the Law of the Lord from the hand of Moses.
